From a teacher standpoint, it helps to simply know when a child is in foster care. We would like to know how the child addresses the foster parent (do they call them Mom, Dad, Mr., Mrs., etc.?). Also, make the teacher aware of any visitation days. Sometimes the child has a hard time readjusting after a visit, and simply knowing helps us be more understanding.

Family Restoration

Many people get involved in foster care to protect children. However, once you've been involved in foster care for a while, you realize that this is a good motivation but an incomplete one. Foster care at its best is also about family restoration. Perhaps some of our bias against biological families comes from the assumption that most children enter foster care because of physical or sexual abuse. However the latest available national data tells us the most common reasons children enter care:

- 62% Neglect
- 36% Parental Drug Abuse
- 14% Caretaker Inability to Coj
- 12% Physical Abuse
- 10% Housing
- 9% Child Behavior
- 7% Parent Incarceration
- 5% Alcohol Abuse
- 5% Abandonment
- 4% Sexual Abuse
- 2% Child Drug Abuse
- 2% Child Disability
- 1% Relinquishment
- 1% Parental Death

A neglectful parent is not necessarily a parent who doesn't care. Often, neglect happens due to addiction, domestic violence or lack of knowledge about appropriate care of a child. These are issues that can be addressed. You'll notice that, by comparison, a relatively small percentage of children in foster care are there because of physical or sexual abuse.

The data from 2017 suggests that, 49% of the 247,631 children exiting foster care were reunited with their biological families. 24% were adopted, 8% were emancipated, 10% went to live with a guardian and 7% went to live with another relative.

For many, the thought of interacting with biological families is scary. Most of that fear comes from never having (knowingly) met one. Certainly, the idea of building a relationship with a person who physically abuses children is daunting, but as we covered earlier, that is not the story for most of the children in care.
